A 42-year-old male with a 10-year history of rheumatoid arthritis (RA) presented with a 2-week history of progressive weakness and numbness in both lower extremities. The weakness was more pronounced in the legs than in the arms. The numbness was described as a "pins and needles" sensation. The patient had no history of trauma, surgery, or recent falls. He was on chronic low-dose prednisone (5 mg daily) for his RA. His medical history was otherwise unremarkable. Physical examination revealed mild muscle wasting in the lower extremities and a positive Babinski sign bilaterally. Sensory examination showed decreased vibration sense and proprioception in the lower extremities. Laboratory studies, including complete blood count, serum electrolytes, and renal function tests, were within normal limits. A lumbar puncture was performed, showing a normal cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) profile. Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) of the spine revealed a T12 vertebral body fracture, which was the cause of the neurological deficits. The patient underwent surgical fixation of the fracture and was discharged on a course of physical therapy. The neurological deficits resolved completely within 6 weeks of surgery. This case highlights the importance of considering spinal cord injury as a potential cause of neurological symptoms in patients with chronic medical conditions. The use of MRI in the diagnosis of spinal cord injury is emphasized, as it provides detailed information about the location and extent of the injury. The patient's response to surgical treatment and subsequent rehabilitation is also noted. The case is discussed in the context of the broader literature on spinal cord injury and its management.

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and dates, which appears to be a record of some kind. The names are written in a cursive script, and the dates are in a more formal, printed style. The list is organized into two columns, with names on the left and dates on the right. The names are: John Smith, James Brown, William Jones, and Thomas White. The dates are: 1810, 1811, 1812, and 1813. The list is followed by a signature, which appears to be "John Smith".
